

MAR 12 1958

STAT

Circ.: m. 183,755
S. 245,400

Front Page	Edit Page	Other Page

Date:

CIA

Editor—"A country that steals another's military secrets cannot be trusted," reports Mrs. Florence Whitney (Letters, February 20). And I would hasten to agree.

However, it grieves me to have to add that the U.S. maintains what is known as the CIA—Central Intelligence Agency—which has, as part of its regular duties, the job of stealing military secrets from other countries.

I hope Mrs. Whitney's trust in our great Nation will be able to survive this knowledge—though she may find it necessary, as I have, to differentiate between the Nation itself and certain aspects of its government.

WILLIAM J. MARCOLIS.
San Francisco.